HIRAETH Unique to us Welsh

Hiraeth

I have always maintained that if melancholy was an Olympic sport, the Welsh would be Gold medalists.

Little wonder that we have our very own, specific (if hotly debated as to it's EXACT translation) word called... Hiraeth.

It's literal translation means 'Long Gone' and to many, this is an accurate start...

Some say Hiraeth is close to a melancholic longing for a time or a place that can never be again. Others say it's something a little deeper and more wistful than home sickness or maybe a great longing for home.

The other most common national trait I find in the Welsh is a patriotism and a national pride almost without fervorous equal. (Unsurprising - as a small nation, as we've had to shout loudly to be heard) Therefore when some of us have to leave this terrestrial paradise (as I have) the flip side of this passionate love of country... is the missing of it.

If you love your country as much as we do, although we are divided at times on it's EXACT translation, one thing this word will always be agreed upon and unify, is that when you are away from Wales it will create in you an undefinable feeling that will guarantee you will always make podium to receive your medal.
